INTRODUCTION

The family is the smallest and first social unit for a child, before he becomes acquainted with the world around him, he will first become acquainted with the family situation. Social experiences within the family will have a huge influence on the child's future development. It is the family that will give color to a child's life, both behavior, character, reading the Koran and daily customs. The family is also the place where a child gets the first forging which then determines the good and bad of his future life in society. So there is no doubt that the family is an important element in determining the good and bad of society.

Family and education are not usually separated, because so far it has been recognized that the family is one of the Three Education Centers which provides education naturally. According to Kamrani Buseri, M.A. Education in the family environment takes place from the moment the child is born, even after adulthood, parents still have the right to give advice to the child.

An important factor that plays a role in determining a child's life is parental education which is then combined into religious education. In every child there is an urge and a power to imitate. With this encouragement, children can do things that their parents do. Therefore, parents must be role models for their children. Whatever is heard and seen is always imitated without considering the good and bad. In this case, great vigilance and attention is expected from parents. Because this period of imitation indirectly helps shape the character and personality of children in the future.

Family education is expected to be a means of forming a child's character and personality into a complete human being, namely a human being who is virtuous, intelligent and skilled. So, in the future the child will become a good human being, a good member of society and a good citizen. Religious education (especially Islamic religion) is education that is very suitable to be applied in the context of forming children's character (morals). Because Islamic religious education includes education in learning to read the Koran, the value of belief (aqidah), and the value of service (ibadah). Religious education given from an early age requires the participation of the family, because it has previously been known that the family is the first and main educational institution that can have an influence on children.

The implementation of religious education for children in the family is influenced by encouragement from the child himself and also encouragement from the family. Everyone hopes for a safe, peaceful and prosperous household. In family life, every family dreams of their children being pious and pious children. Children are a mandate from Allah SWT to their parents to be cared for, cared for and educated as well as possible. Family education has strategic value in forming a child's personality. education from their parents through example and daily living habits in the family. Whether the example given is good or not and how the parents' daily living habits in the family will influence the child's mental development.
